

Exhibit your work in juried art shows. Restore a mural. Teach community children art at the Koinonia Arts and Crafts Festival. However you choose to focus your interests, at Manchester, you'll be encouraged to investigate, appreciate, and gain skills valuable for a variety of professional art careers.

side by side

- Kate Brelje '09, Krystal Poe '08, Heidi Gonyea '08, Derek Hanson '08 and Doug Flowers '07 got a taste of complex techniques used in the restoration and conservation class Professor Adams teaches. Historical and community organizations often contact Manchester's expert for advice on restoring poorly conditioned murals, and he involves students in the work he does.
- Jeff Combs '08 worked as a summer assistant to artist/designer Janet Ecklebarger, whose work is displayed regionally and in Chicago.

academics that matter

You'll be encouraged to explore ideas, ask why, examine techniques, and think critically about your decisions. The art faculty will embrace your ideas, but they'll challenge you to expand and create beyond your own expectations. Travel abroad, gain a new cultural perspective. Study weaving, pottery, painting, architecture, and art appreciation. Add those experiences to your art major for a B.A. degree, combine an art minor with another major, or consider a teaching degree. The choices are yours.

SUCCESS

- First-year student, Catherine Davis '10, honors student and art major, had two pieces accepted to the juried art show in Fort Wayne. Catherine's projects combine velvet, old photographs and wood.
- Wade Jagger '03 teaches art at Wawasee High School, Syracuse, Ind.

I FOUND

... FLEXIBILITY

I wanted to go to a larger school but decided to come here instead because of what Manchester offered. I've had the flexibility to tailor the courses to my specific interests. An art and French major, I spent a semester in France, then combined those influences to create a piece, "French Red/Green," accepted in the Northeast Indiana College juried student art show.
