

ENGLISH

If you enjoyed English in high school, you'll be even more enthused with all that is offered in college. You'll be involved in engaging projects, learn to think creatively and be challenged to write more effectively. Plus, the knowledge you gain as an English major will provide a good foundation for success in many careers.

academics that matter

At Manchester, you learn to adapt. From the time you graduate and throughout your life, chances are you'll have 8-10 careers. A solid and comprehensive background in English allows you to apply your versatile skills in any career setting.

side by side

- With his English professor's encouragement, Adam King '10 applied for and won a Kauffman Award to attend a workshop on filmmaking at the prestigious New York Film Academy in New York City.
- Stacey Morris '09 is discovering her strengths. She works with the faculty as a department assistant. She's also a writing consultant in the Success Center, runs Partners In Learning, and tutors students in a nearby middle school.

- When Kyle Watson '09 had an assignment to write about gender dynamics and the hierarchy in Milton's Paradise Lost, he felt overwhelmed. But then his professor, Dr. Erickson, helped him organize his thoughts into a really strong paper. Kyle became so inspired, he added an English minor to his chemistry major.

SUCCESS

- Forest Etsler '05 was awarded a Fulbright Scholar to teach in Korea. Forest applied for and was accepted to continue teaching a second year in the same program.
- Fredrick Agyeman-Duah '04 was accepted into the University of Denver graduate program in international politics.
- Sara Kerkhoff '03 Rundel went from Manchester to Morocco on a Fulbright Scholarship and is now an editor on the Harvard Law Review.

I FOUND

... MYSELF

College is a place where young people grow into who they are. Through classes, friendships, heartaches, all-nighters, athletics . . . we learn what we can accomplish. We grow proud of our strengths, admit our weaknesses, find what we love . . . and what we don't, and ultimately become the people we will be the rest of our lives.
