

FRENCH

Those who study languages tend to be good students academically. They are problem solvers and enjoy learning a variety of topics. Language students work hard and achieve much. They study abroad, often graduate at the top of their class, and gain experiences that add value to their lives and their degrees.

side by side

- As a first-year student, Colleen Hamilton '09 wrote a paper for a French class project on the influence of Voltaire as a playwright. Working closely with her professor, Colleen turned the paper back into English to present at the Dean's Symposium. She won first place in writing!
- In January, Aubrey Walgamuth '08 and Melissa Webb '08 were among students in Dr. Traxler and Dr. Coulter-Kern's trip to France, where students gained a deep inside view of an unfamiliar culture.

academics that matter

Our students attend research conferences, make presentations at undergraduate conferences, write extensively, study abroad, win awards, apply for and receive scholarships—how do they do it so successfully and so often? Simply, they're good students, but also because our faculty are good mentors.

SUCCESS

- Katie Leese '06 studied her junior year in France, then returned another year to teach. Katie has her teacher certification in both French and language arts and is currently teaching at Manchester High School in Indiana.
- Imagine winning a Fulbright Scholarship! You could at Manchester. Our students are up against some of the toughest competition in the U.S. for this national competition to study or teach abroad. Harvard, Indiana University, Stanford, and all kinds of places, yet Manchester keeps on winning. Rosetta Burkholder '04, Hannah Ditmars '04, Rachel Paske '04, Wendy Matheny '06 and Sam Cox '07, to name a few.

I FOUND

... SPACE

College is a completely new environment where you find space to express yourself, learn, try out and think through what you feel. Manchester doesn't stifle me, doesn't abandon me . . . just gives me space . . . space to grow and explore and claim thoughts for my own . . . where I can connect my values, my studies, my spirituality, and my daily life.
