

JOURNALISM

If you like to write about current events, the arts, sports, or politics, and you enjoy asking questions, checking for detail, being creative ... check out journalism. Manchester offers a minor that can be combined with numerous majors for a variety of career options.

academics that matter

At Manchester, you'll be challenged to ask questions, seek answers, and join organizations in which you can develop your passion. You'll learn to write and communicate more effectively, think critically about difficult subjects, and build relationships with people from diverse backgrounds and interests.

side by side

- Students traveled with the Oak Leaves faculty advisor to the 50th annual Indiana Collegiate Press Association conference, at Indiana State University. There the students worked with peers from across the state, participated in workshops and attended presentations.

- Students and their professor from the editing class visited the Journal Gazette, in Fort Wayne, where they met reporters, photographers and editors, while discussing the fine points of putting together a major newspaper.

SUCCESS

- At the 2008 Indiana Collegiate Press Association conference, Oak Leaves writers Alina BigJohny, Adam King, Jesie Hickerson, Laura McSpadden and Matt Penner won a combined eight writing awards in categories of opinion, sports, entertainment, feature series, and stand-alone section.
- Megan Hineline '04 Fetters is a copyeditor for Asher Agency in Fort Wayne.
- Erin McComas '08 has already published articles in two Fort Wayne magazines, one in Fort Wayne Woman and the other in Arts United.

I FOUND

... A HOME AWAY FROM HOME

I was really impressed with the English Department, the beautiful campus and the small class sizes. I think I have closer relationships with my professors than I would have had at a larger university. It was really weird at first going from the urban area I'm from near Louisville to a rural community like North Manchester. But now, I kind of like the dichotomy. Every school year is like a vacation.
