

PRE-LAW

Want to prepare for a career in law? Even though the American Bar Association doesn't recommend a specific major for students preparing for a career in law, Manchester College has an advising program that works well. It's so successful that in the last 10 years, 85 percent of MC students who apply to law school are accepted. The national average is 62 percent.

side by side

- Manchester students are quite competitive in the American Mock Trial Association. Each year they bring back awards, boasting five team national tournament bids and two Spirit awards, with 13 individual outstanding attorney and nine outstanding witness awards.

academics that matter

Graduates tell their Manchester professors that Mock Trial experiences and pre-law studies have been a vital part of their success. They see the rewards of learning to write well, think through difficult problems and present well-organized thoughts—the very skills you'll need for law school. Even though there's no specific major for pre-law, interested students should choose a major where classes and professors challenge you, and definitely, you should plan to participate in Mock Trial. Tihitina Dagnev '10 did, and won an Outstanding Attorney Award in her first regional tournament. You too, can meet with pre-law advisor, Dr. Leonard Williams, and identify the best part for your pre-law education.

success

Manchester graduates are accepted to law schools all over the country.

- Blake Hike '06, political science major, won the Jo Young Switzer Award for excellence in writing at the Dean's Student Symposium and is now attending Indiana University School of Law at Indianapolis.
- Nicci Small '06 is at the University of Tulsa College of Law studying Indian affairs.
- Ashley Davis '07 is studying corporate law at DePaul School of Law in Chicago.
- Holly DeNeve '08 and Nkechi Onyeji '08 both gained admission to law school.

I FOUND

... CHARACTER

I've had so many opportunities here that have helped build my character. I became president of a club, directed a play, and had the chance to play the part of a lawyer in my first Mock Trial experience. I've gained confidence in speaking and quickened my ability to think on my feet. I've become comfortable in my own skin and have gained a sense of integrity that will carry me throughout life.

Nkechi Onyeji '08, political science major
