

SPECIAL EDUCATION (Mild Interventions)

If you want to make an impact with children who have special needs, and teach children with autism, Down Syndrome, or physical or mental challenges, Manchester is the “go to” place. Whether your interest is young children, junior high or high school age, the Manchester education faculty help you prepare for a license to suit your goals.

academics that matter

Manchester graduates in special education are often the first ones hired! They are more marketable, for one, because they have a license to teach special education preschool-12.

Manchester is one of the few colleges in the state to prepare students for both elementary and secondary licensure. Most colleges require students to choose one or the other.

side by side

- Tagged a leader in both the state organization of Student Education Association (SEA) and the local chapter, Jeanna Collins '08 is making a name for herself and for Manchester. One very successful activity at MC involves SEA members bringing adults with disabilities from the Association of Retarded Citizens (ARC) in Wabash County to Manchester home basketball games.

- Jenny Mevis '08 believes extra attention often gives children the boost they need to do well in school. She and other education majors volunteer with Partners in Learning, tutoring children in the community with homework.

SUCCESS

- Adam Moore '04 is teaching in a Boston inner city school; Genia Fox Kottkam '05 student taught in Chicago, then was hired by Southwest Allen County Schools, Fort Wayne, Ind., to teach special education.
- Dorey Bungatik '07 Mobley interviewed and was hired two months before she graduated. Dorey is a resource teacher at Laketon Elementary school where she team teaches children with emotional difficulties and also coaches her favorite sports.

I FOUND

... INSPIRATION

taking in the culture of New Zealand, and being a member of MC's awesome cross country team—I made a great decision when I decided to come to Manchester.

Meganmarie Pinkerton '07 Dennis, early/middle childhood and mild interventions education major
